

WELCOME

Lathan Birmingham is a current private music teacher originally from North Carolina. Lathan made All-District Band on clarinet every year from seventh through twelfth grade and auditioned for All-State twice. In 2017, she attended the North Carolina Governor's School for Instrumental Music as a clarinetist.

Throughout high school, she also served as Drum Major for the marching band, was first-chair trombone in the jazz band, and later marched mellophone in college. She was honored to receive both the John Philip Sousa Award and the UNC Charlotte Outstanding Musical Performance Award during her senior year.

Lathan studied Music Education for two years before earning a bachelor's degree in Cybersecurity. While her career took a different path, her passion for music education never went away. She plans to return to school to finish her Music Education degree and pursue her lifelong goal of becoming a band director.

Lathan is excited to work with the students at LWHS and is looking forward to helping them build confidence, develop as performers, and have a memorable season together.
